I may be gone for a while, guys.

Don't worry and don't wait up. I'm fine.

Sorry for the Intentionally Cryptic Transmission.

This looks like a good idea.

You have to work without the internets?!!!

(Okay, says she who needs to borrow the roommate's soldering iron or my internet-in-my-pocket will run out of power.)

Please make sure the soldering iron has cooled off before you put it in your pocket!

(Not that I ever knew anyone who forgot that important safety tip. No sirree.)

At least not twice...

Ouch!

No, much simpler than that - IIMP is charged through a standard 4 pin mini-USB. Except that the charging port broke off of the circuit board, so I needed to solder it back on. Sadly, I'm not sure if I have tools fine enough to reconnect the four broken connectors... I'm going to make another go at this, but if might be time to get a new phone. (Wah. Fixing is more fun. And I don't know what phone I want - am I committed enough to my open standards idealism to go with the FreeRunner? And I was thinking of picking up a TouchBook, but getting both would be kind of overboard on the gadgets.)

There Is No Such Thing As Too Many Gadgets.

And I *love* my Android phone. =)

Stay frosty, and don't eat all the peanuts on the flight this time. Other folks have the munchies to, ya know.

Safe travels. We'll be here when you get back.

Drive safe and remember to duck as appropriate. My taxpayer dollars would prefer to cover your salary, not your disability benefits.

Best wishes. Will continue to spread the progeny of Elmer while you are out.

I misread that as the prophecy of Elmer.

Dude, I have the most surreal moments in your comment threads.

Good luck and safe travels. I'll keep a virtual candle burning in the window. [1]

Sorry for the Intentionally Cryptic Transmission.

Need-to-know, man. You've got it and we don't.

[1] Not your window, as (a) breaking into your place to light candles would be Mucho Creepy, and (b) Angry Kitteh would probably knock the candle over anyway.

I hope it's for something fun, or at least something interesting.

If you gotta go, you've gotta go. We'll keep an eye out for your return, and make a roster to leave chicken in your stead for Angry Kitty™, so that she still hates you when you get back.
